It all started with the goal of building something amazing from our small city of Artigas, Uruguay. Today, I'm incredibly proud of the journey that followed.

As the Developer for Blockbit, I've been part of a historic achievement. We became the first team from Artigas to win the FIRST LEGO league in Uruguay's Robotics Olympiad, which earned us the chance to compete on the world stage.

But traveling to competitions in the US and Puerto Rico was about more than just technology for me. It was an immersion into new cultures, that crash course in global communication, and a lesson in adaptability. On the road, I didn't just learn to code under pressure, because I learned how to connect with people from completely different backgrounds, and that has been priceless.

This journey has been my ultimate classroom. It has taught me more than any textbook could about teamwork, resilience, and leadership. And seeing our work inspire more kids in Artigas to get into tech is the greatest reward of all.

I'm not just building projects; I'm building a path for myself and hopefully for others.
